Take time to tour the state's oldest neighborhood, where medicine came from the herb garden and the newspaper was printed on a hand-operated press. Four original Little Rock dwellings on the museum's grounds provide the setting as expert tour guides describe life on the Arkansas frontier and costumed Living History actors portray early Arkansans.

Stroll through the galleries at your leisure and see evidence of Arkansas's rich past through objects made and used by Arkansans. See how the state's creative legacy has continued when you visit the museum's contemporary gallery devoted to today's Arkansas artists.

The museum's newest exhibit gallery (open winter 2008) is devoted to the Native American experience in Arkansas, primarily of the state's three indigenous tribes: the Caddo, Quapaw and Osage. The exhibit highlights the language, art and life ways of Native Americans in Arkansas, the removal period from the Native American perspective and the continuing viability of these three Nations.

Find original gifts handcrafted by artisans from around the state in the Museum Store. From fused glass jewelry to hand-carved kitchen utensils to the truly unique gourd instruments, buy it in the Museum Store, or online and we'll ship it to you.
